CHURCH AND COMMUNITY.

By Graham Taylor, Associate Editor of The Survey. Among many signs of better times coming is the growth of the common ground upon which church workers and social workers meet, min-

That religion and society, the church and the community, have values to exchange becomes clearer in the consciousness of those working for each. Indeed, it becomes more and more evident that work truly done for one serves the other. Though not identical in aim or method, the church and community cannot be separated.

If the community fails the church cannot succeed. If the church falls the community is not successful. Reciprocity is more and more sought by each. The church needs the social spirit and method of the best work for the community. And social work no less needs the spiritual ideals, sanctions and passion which religion only can give to any and every kind of service.

The common ground upon which this religious consciousness in social work and this social consciousness in religious work are being born anew is growing under the feet of those most actively and effectively at work for their fellow-men. The National Conference of Charities and Correction, with Roman Catholic, Jewish, Protestant, and Ethical Culture members equally interested and active, is a new kind of "Ecumenical broadens the ideal and scope of the service which the early church sought to render when it was one in all the world. Church assemblies and missionary conferences, congresses of social workers, and gatherings of specialists vie with each other in laying the religious and social emphasis upon the same aspect of human life. In the process, work for the individual becomes no less indispensable, but all the more effective, and work for the community becomes no less socialized for being more personal and human.

is being demonstrated to the church and community alike that while it is good to reform it is better to form; while it is good to disseess wrongs it is better to preoccupy and prepossess with right. While sometimes it is necessary to be negative it is stronger to be posttive and affirmative; while it is good to know and teach and legislate what not to do and what not to be, it is better to preach and practice what it is best to do and be; while destructive aims and methods are demanded. yet both church and community far more need constructive ideals and executive ability to realize them.
